The Arts: Scenery Hill potter perfects ash glaze technique . Sunday, December 22, 2002. By Dave Zuchowski . The Potter's House in Scenery Hill can't be more than two miles from the well-established Westerwald Pottery, yet owner Frank Stofan maintains that the proximity of the two enterprises doesn't factor into his business equation.

The best type of brushes to use for stippling are house painting brushes or artist's bristle brushes used for oil painting. Care should be taken in the amount of glaze charged into the brush. Since stippling uses the edge or tip of the brush, it's usually held vertically. If the brush is overcharged, the glaze is likely to run out. Spattering

As I make decisions on glaze shape and placement, an important consideration is finding the right scale relationship between the glaze elements and the form. Again, I hope to integrate form with surface design, texture, and color. 1 Cross section of freshly thrown bowl. Note thickness in the foot and lip.

Add paint and glaze together on the brush. Dip your brush in glaze, then add the paint you are using for the area. Combining glaze and paint on the brush will help ensure that the glaze matches the shape you want to have emphasized. You should use a high-quality artist's brush in order to get the best effects from your glaze.

To glaze interiors, glazes can be quickly poured into a pot, left three seconds, then quickly poured back into the glaze bucket. Any excess glaze can be flicked off using a sharp rotation of the wrist while keeping the pot's rim parallel to the floor, it can be wiped off with a sponge or towel, or it can be left as it is, for its decorative effect.

Keep in mind that an oil-based glaze will not wipe off with a wet rag as shown here. Glazing works best to bring out textured surfaces. Attempting it on a flat surface might emphasize the wood grain, but it won't be as dramatic of an impact. Look for crests, wood scrolls, columns, and other unique molding and millwork.

To the eye, a Jun glaze's opalescence appears lustrous, translucent (with a depth of appearance) and typically cyan. See Figure 1. ††††† During firing when the Jun glaze is starting to cool at 1200°C but still thick like syrup, two glasses start to spontaneously separate or unmix: a silica-rich and a lime-rich glass.
